

Department of Education: International Education

The Department of Education’s Title VI/ Fulbright-Hays programs are the federal government’s most comprehensive programs for developing national capacity in international and foreign language education. These programs support instruction in less-commonly taught languages—particularly from regions of national strategic importance—and research on cultural issues of importance to our national security. These programs educate individuals whose abilities help ensure the successful international engagement of the U.S. education, government, and business sectors.

Title VI National Resource Centers (NRC) and Foreign Language and Area Studies (FLAS) Fellowships provide students from around the country with world-class opportunities for intensive study of world areas and foreign languages, particularly less-commonly taught languages, at both the undergraduate and graduate levels.

AAU urges Congress to provide at least $76 million for Title VI International Education programs in FY18

The NRC and other Title VI programs have created an unrivaled technical training system producing linguistically proficient, area-savvy graduates who go on to successful careers in government, military, academia, and the private sector. These graduates educate thousands of students, teachers, policymakers, military and diplomatic officials, faculty, and the general public, as well as engage in diplomatic missions in areas of strategic national importance.

Restoring Title VI to its historic level of funding is vital to ensuring its programs continue to contribute effectively to our nation’s long-term security, global leadership, and economic competitiveness.
